BLUF

CWP provides funding to DoD organizations that conduct collaborative research and development projects with foreign partners. Goal of the program is to:

- Accelerate the delivery of high-quality solutions to warfighter gaps
- Improve U.S. interoperability with partners
- Strengthen global partnerships

Mechanics:

- Selects projects through annual, competitive process
 - Selection process supported by U.S. and partner SMEs
- Provides up to $1M RDT&E funding per year for up to 2 years
 - Funds for U.S. tasks only
 - Leveraged by contributions from U.S. and foreign partners
 - Average CWP funding is ~$500K/year – $1M requests have to be clear “game changers”
- Allows projects to get to next phase of maturation

Cooperative RDT&E

- Projects managed by committed U.S. and foreign government partner(s) with equivalent project manager duties
- U.S. and foreign partners have active participation in the research and development aspects of the project
 - Each government gains defense benefits from engaging in the project
 - Each government provides contributions to the effort, to include: government labor, equipment, facility use, national industrial and academic participation
 - The more novel work each partner contributes, the better
 - Tests and demos to prove out the overarching research and development efforts
 - Integration-only projects considered “R&D content - low” unless fulfilling a critical operational interoperability shortfall

There are other programs and funding sources for these ➡

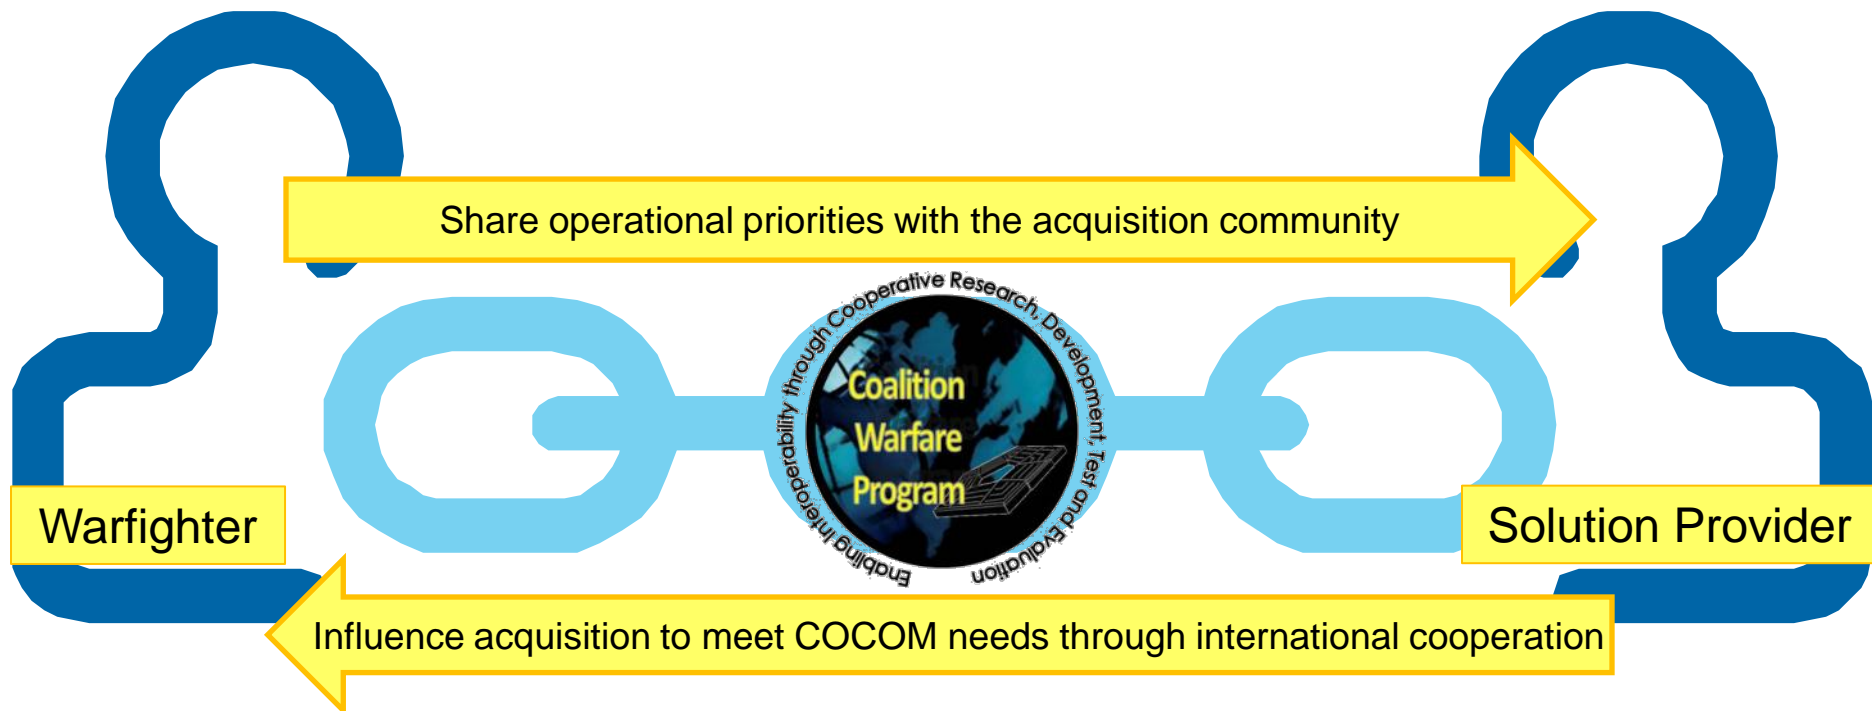

IS NOT:

- Foreign Military Sales
- U.S.-only build for exportable solutions
- Test and mods to meet foreign-only or U.S.-only need
- Operational sharing (“Train and Equip”)
- Operational exercise support
- Focused on demos/tests of technologies to select procurement options for U.S. or Partner
- System training for foreign partners

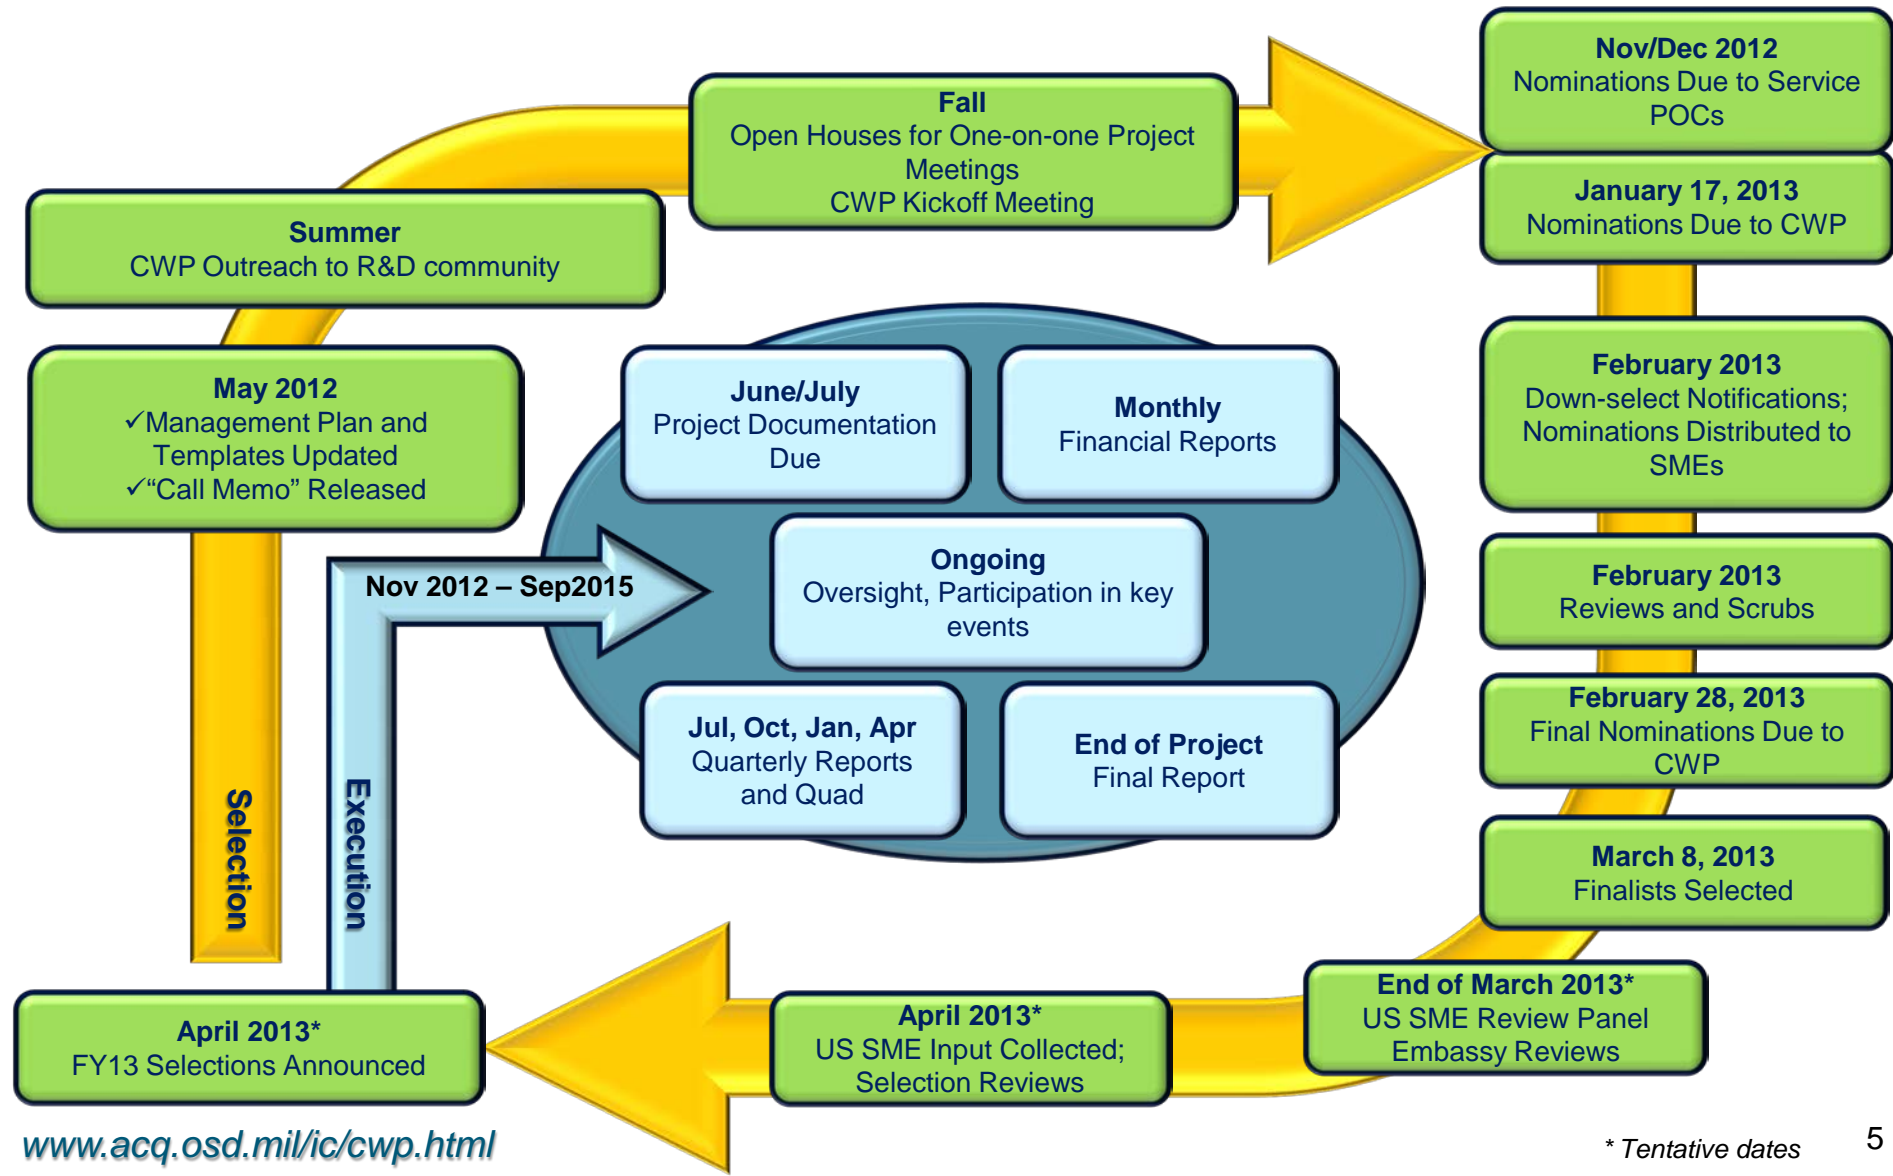

Helping Meet DoD Shortfalls

- CWP projects are selected to meet operational needs
 - Understanding of operational priorities by R&D community requires engagement with COCOM S&T staffs who need specific solutions to specific problems
